Thanksgiving Day.

In accordance with the proclamations of the president of the United States and the Governor of Tennessee, Thursday of next week will be observed as a day of thanksgiving. We learn that it will be generally observed in Knoxville, as it should be everywhere, and that business men generally will suspend business on that day. We make this announcement for the benefit of our friends in the country, so that they need not be disappointed if they come to town that day and find business houses closed. We trust the day will be observed everywhere.

Minnie, who has served so efficiently for several years as special agent of the postoffice department and then as postoffice inspector, has been promoted to the chief inspectorship of a division, with headquarters at Knoxville. Mary Stuart.

If the personnel of an audience is any compliment to an artist, and it can be no otherwise, Madame Janauschek and her company have abundant reason to be proud of the reception given them last night on their first appearance on our local stage. Nearly every seat in the parquette was filled and the galleries were jammed. And the audience had also abundant reasons for being more than satisfied with the performance.

We think we may safely say that never before has so well balanced a support or such a star appeared in Knoxville. There were no gaps in the merits of the different actors, and considering the unequalled talent of Madame Janauschek, the minor characters exhibited themselves to an excellent advantage. Not one of them is anything but a finished artist, and the lines were read with so much care and correctness that there is no fault to find.

Of the acting of the Madame we can find but little to say. Our adjective all seem too tame to characterize such a piece of acting as was Mary Stuart. Every word was a revelation and every line an inspiration. Such was her power that the audience were unable even to express their approbation and sat spell-bound from the time she appeared upon the stage until she left it in the last act after the sad, sad parting with her devoted and heart-broken attendant, a scene that left but few dry eyes in all that great audience. Between the pathetic and sorrowful countenance and demeanor, the resigned and courageous manner in which she met the accumulation of her dreadful misfortunes and the noble, royal, queenly mien she displayed in the fiery, vehement denunciation of the ambitious fear-stricken Elizabeth it is hard to decide which was the finer portraiture. (The hall-marks of her art are written on all of them in letters that "he who runs may read.")

In conclusion we would reiterate our former remark. No combination that has ever appeared in Knoxville is so perfect in all its appointments and so well calculated to give an evening of fine, intellectual pleasure. It is a duty each one owes himself to see them while in the city, for an equal opportunity for unalloyed enjoyment will not be met with for these many days.

Smith's Knoxville City Directory.

Ye local is under many obligations to the genial and clever publisher, Mr. Ross A. Smith, for a copy of his Knoxville City Directory for 1890-81, which has just been completed. The directory is a book of 226 pages, neatly gotten up, well and plainly printed, and is the most complete and valuable directory of our city that has ever been published, and Mr. Smith deserves much credit therefor.

It consists of a complete list of the citizens of Knoxville, with places of business and residence, together with a list of churches, schools, banks, newspapers, secret, benevolent and other associations and societies, state, county and city government, and much other useful and valuable information for citizens as well as strangers. All this is arranged in careful alphabetical order, adding much to the convenience.

In addition is also given a carefully prepared commercial directory of the city, and a directory of each postoffice in the county with postmaster and prominent citizens; also, a plaster's directory, giving the names of all who own ten or more acres of land in Knox county; and still further, a liberal supply of advertisements of the leading features of business in the city.

Mr. Smith and his agents are now delivering the work to subscribers and advertisers. His headquarters are at the Hattie House. He has a number of extra copies of the book, which he will dispose of at $3 each. It is a work no citizen should be without.

LOW RATES FOR CASH.

The WHIG AND CHRONICLE will be sent in Clubs of 5, with money accompanying the order, for $6.25; in Clubs of 10 for $10, and in Clubs of 20 for $20, the agent of the Club of 20 to get an extra copy free.

Sudden Change in the Weather.

A very sudden change of weather was experienced in this latitude early yesterday morning. It began by turning gradually warmer and threatening rain, then shifting suddenly to a half sleet, half rain, which, almost frozen as it fell, so chilly had the atmosphere become. This kept up for some time, and it continued bitterly cold, raw and freezing and growing colder the entire day, rendering outdoor exercise quite disagreeable. It was winter in earnest, and was a slight taste of the severe northwest which was mentioned in our telegraphic columns yesterday as having swept over the great north-west.
